Ajit Pai

Chairman, Federal Communications Commission
445 12th Street SW,
Washington, DC 20554

Dear Mr. Chairman,

Cable and telephone companies provide access to the internet. As you know, access to the internet is important for living and successfully being productive in today's society. Companies like AT&T and Comcast are telecommunications carriers. They help us access information. They do not (and should not) have the right to censor or slow down one's speech and one's access to online content or information. When one uses their broadband service, they get to decide who they communicate with and what information they transmit. I strongly believe the FCC should retain the ability to stop internet service providers (ISPs) from interfering with the communications choices of hundreds of millions of American citizens. The courts have already told you and the FCC that in order to do this, ISPs must remain under Title II.

I'm urging you, Chairman Pai, to preserve real Net Neutrality rules and keep Title II in place for broadband internet access.

Sincerely,

Dominic Patafie
